Presets & UI. Photo: Adobe. The first thing you'll notice when you open Photoshop Elements is its interface. It's simple and super quick to get your work done. Once you open an image, you'll see the familiar Photoshop cursor (guess what?), a white toolbar, and a layer panel in the middle. From there, you can set the basic image settings, edit individual layers, set your preferences, export your image, etc. The UI is simple, but it is fast and efficient. You'll notice that all your settings are in the right-hand side of the screen, underneath the Quick Control panel. The settings are organized in small, easily accessible sections. If you need a more in-depth look at your image settings, you can always click "Quick View Settings". For a better overview of the UI, here is an example of a picture I took, before I applied some slight adjustments: It's possible to export your images directly from the program. In the top right corner of the screen, you can find the "Export" button. I used Photoshop Elements, and after having finished adjusting all of the settings, I applied the Liquify tool and dragged it around to move the image. I exported the image for you, as you can see, it only took about 30 seconds to do. You can also send the image through Photoshop's own CDN to access your image through a web browser. Unfortunately, you cannot create your own presets. Adobe Photoshop Elements doesn't come with many presets. It comes with 10 default presets, which you can edit by clicking the dropdown arrow in the bottom-left corner. I believe that more presets would make the program more intuitive to use, even for photographers who are new to the program. I used Photoshop Elements a lot when I was a graphic designer. I currently use Elements for some of my work, but I often use Photoshop to create images or photos for my web portfolio. Adobe Photoshop Elements has basic photo editing features, but I believe that it lacks in the "real-world" department. It doesn't have many important features that you may need, such as handling RAW images (it uses the PSD file format), or creating effects. Adobe Photoshop Elements has a range of features. Q: Hyperledger fabric consensus plugin - How to get the current state? I'm using hyperledger fabric consensus plugin to get the agreement upon some block. However, it seems my block is not synced with other peers and the client side get the last state directly. Is there any way to get the current state of the blockchain? Thanks in advance. A: I am using version 1.0.10 of consensus plug-in. For the version 1.0.6 we can use this command to see the current state, of course it depends on an order. peer chaincode query -l golang -n your_name -c 'your_name' -d YOUR_PEER_IP In the version 1.0.10 we can use this command: peer chaincode invoke -c 'your_name' -n your_name -v 1.0 -d '{"input":{"0}}"' A: You can use the service name "hyperledger" to query all synced peers. peer chaincode query -n hyperledger -c 'youractivity' or peer chaincode query -c 'youractivity' -n hyperledger To view the blocks, peer chaincode query -n hyperledger -c 'youractivity' -d '{"blocks":[{"genesisBlock":{"author":"Tester","nonce":"123456789","difficulty":"12345","extraData":"blockcontent"}}]}' or peer chaincode query -c 'youractivity' -d '{"blocks":[{"genesisBlock":{"author":"Tester","nonce":"123456789","difficulty":"12345","extraData":"blockcontent"}}]}' -n hyperledger A: One thing you can do is to use the [api.fabric-ca-client] and call the method: func GetLastUpdateBlock() (*xlctypes.Block, error) to retrieve the last block. But for this you need to set the block cache timeout on the fabric-ca-server to a value higher
